

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1744.

To the AUTHOR, &c.

SIR,

New Edition of the Six Volumes of Voyages being call'd for, you will oblige very much the Proprietors of it, to insert in your Paper, the following Account of the Work.

It may be thought needless by some, to say any Thing in Behalf of a Work which has so well receiv'd, as the Six Volumes of Voyages, own by the Title of Churchill's, from the Name of Person who undertook it, at the Recommendation and upon the Plan given him by, the celebrated Lake; who, as we have Reason to believe, contriv'd to it the valuable Piece prefixed to the whole, in-An introductory Discourse, containing the whole History of Navigation from its Original to this Time.

Nevertheless, another Edition being call'd for, and several Works set on Foot to be published in the newfound Weekly Way, wherein it was judg'd, that this Edition would be made the Foundation of some of them, by which Means, the Proprietors might be de-priv'd of the Benefit of a Property which had been extremely expensive to them, by Charts, Maps, and Plates, engraved on Copper, to the Number of near 300, besides other Curs, to explain different Curiosities wrought at the Letter-Press; to say nothing of the Purchase of the Copy-right, which, however, amounted to a considerable Sum; for these Reasons, they thought it proper to set forth Proposals, in Compliance with the prevailing Humour; and, at the same time, to give a brief Account of the Work, for the Sake of those who were in Possession of it, and who should incline to purchase it.

The Proprietors had, at first, an Inclination to reduce Bulk, and, consequently, the Price, so as to bring it to Four Volumes; and consulted some Gentlemen, in whose Opinion they had Reason to rely, whether an Abridgment of it could be undertaken, without weakning the authorities, and prejudicing the Work. But they soon convinced, by the following Reasons, that this Design was not to be pursued.

The Gentlemen observed, that the most valuable Parts of the Collection were written by Men of Letters, who understood what they were about; and that to abridge them, would be to cut off those Circumstances which are the assured Marks of the Gentlemen's their Relations; and so would render them doubtful and suspected.

They knew, they said, what Dependence they made upon an Author who set his Name to his Work, and who was an Eye-Witness of what he relates.
Who would not doubt an anonymous Abridger, who, probably, never was out of his Native Country; and, not in those, or in all those, he pretends to correct, or abridge his Author's? to suggest

Then, said they, besides doing the Authors this most unjust, why should you presume to prescribe the Purchasers, how much of an Author they should read? Have not those who read for their Diversion different Tastes; and those who read for Instruction different Views? An Abridgment published by the Author of a Work, who knows what may best be spared, and his Reader's Profit, as well as his own Credit in it, from the same publick-spirited Principle that set him to Work, we shall always think well of, and encourage: But till you can satisfy us, that your Abridgers are equal Learning, equal Skill in their Subjects, have equal Pains with the first Author, and in such Works as these, have had Ocular Knowledge of the Things they pretend to judge, we can have no Opinion of Abridgments; especially in Works where so much depends, and where the Consequences of being misled may be so fatal to those who read for Instruction, and for Amusement only.

The Proprietors had given it as one Reason for an Abridgment, that thereby they might, in the Description of our Country, unite the Observations of several Authors; and by that Means, avoiding Repetitions, give the Reader, as they thought, a clearer, and perhaps, less trifling Account of that Country, than otherwise could be done. But the Gentlemen observed, that this Reason was still more to be objected to, than any they started: For, first, they observed, that there are not any two Travellers who have treated their Subject in the same Way, or had the same View in treating it; each pursuing the Bent of his Genius; one a Virtuoso, one a Naturalist, one a Geographer, another an Engineer, another a Mariner, &c, yet each instructive, particularly to Persons of the like Tastes. And should you, said the Gentlemen, prefer one Writer's Account, we another, how shall both be pleas'd, if one be omitted? Then the eternal Doubt that will remain, which is the Eye-witness's Authority, which the Abridger's Conjecture; and the Desire a Person will have, whose End is deeper than mere Amusement, to read what the Author himself avers, and how he avers it; whether he describes by his own Observation, or by Hearsay; how will these be answer'd? Furthermore, if two Authors differ in their Accounts of the same Thing, how will the Abridger, who perhaps has never been out of his Garret, know which ought to be prefer'd?

And why should he not let his Reader judge of them as well as himself? If he is to discuss the Point, will not his Reasonings run him into the very Length, to avoid which, he curtails the Author, and robs us of the Liberty of our own Judgment?

Let any Gentleman of Judgment, said they, read the Prefaces to many of the different Pieces, which compose your Six Volumes, and he will not hesitate a Moment, to pronounce, that an Abridgment would destroy the Credit, and, of Consequence, the Use of your Work, and make it appear no better than a Romance, or Piece of Knight-Errantry; unless, as we have hinted, it was undertaken by one, who had been at every Place he alters, and who abridges and mutilates upon the very Spot, or from his Notes taken upon the Spot; which must be allow'd to be next to impracticable.

What, then, they advis'd, was, since a New Edition was call'd for, and that the Proprietors, as is said above, might be in Danger, by Abridgments from others, of losing so valuable a Property, and the Publick so useful and genuine a Work (which was so well received, as to have run thro' two Editions, and has had its Relations so well approved, as to be quoted by many learned Authors, of different Faculties) was, to give it just as it was, without Alteration or Abridgment; leaving every Writer to stand upon his own Credit, and every Reader to be Judge of That. And this the rather, as it is a Justice due to the Purchasers of the former Editions, as well as to the respective Travellers, who took so much Pains, run so many Risques, and were at such great Expence, to inform and instruct the Publick.

This, they added, we should have the less Doubt to do, and the Publick would have the less Doubt to approve, if we gave the Contents of our Six Volumes, and the Names of the principal Authors: Many of whom, are Persons illustrious by Character, of great Learning, Curiosity, Skill, and Experience. Whole very Names, therefore, will protect them from any mutilating Schemes; which can serve only to multiply Books for the selfish Reason of multiplying Property:—Since, after all, it is not to be imagin'd, but that Gentlemen of Taste, and Lovers of Accuracy and Truth, will chuse to have recourse to the Original Authors.

N.B. The following Extract from the Codicil to Mr. Locke's Will, demonstrates how much that celebrated Genius interested himself in this Work.

'I then, Whereas I am inform'd, that there is a Design of publishing Two other Volumes, as a Continuation of the Collection of Voyages, published this Year (viz. 1704) by Ainslie and John Churchill, in Four Volumes in Folio, it is my Will, that my Executor shall, in my Name, present to the said Bodleian Library, (to which he before presents all the Books he wrote himself) these two intended Volumes also, when they come out, which I do hereby give to the University of Oxford, to make up the four Volumes of the Collection aforesaid, which I have already presented to the said University, a Complete Set.

Proposals, and the CONTENTS of the Six Volumes, in Two Sheets, are deliver'd gratis by J. Osborn, at the Golden Ball in Pater-noster Row.
